The Clarete de Criola is a seriously cool wine— a bright, dry, crushable rose. It's crafted from a field blend of old-vine Criolla grapes—Criolla Grande, Cereza, Moscatel, Torrontés Riojano, and Pedro Jimenez—grown at 850 meters in a high desert and trained on pergolas to shield the fruit from the sun. These grapes are the ancient heartbeat of South American wine, spontaneous crosses of Moscatel de Alejandría and Listán Prieto that defined winemaking on the continent for centuries

The Ultimate House Champagne: Winemaker Fabienne Dourdon's La Réserve de Germain - "an attractive yeasty-toasty, mature non-vintage Champagne...I appreciate the creamy, richly flavored palate, aldehydic nutty white chocolate flavors in this classic style and the impressive length. A classy and characterful wine."
 John Szabo, Master Sommelier.
