The Clarete de Criola is a seriously cool wine— a bright, dry, crushable skin-contact wine that drinks like a rose. It's crafted from a field blend of old-vine Criolla grapes—Criolla Grande, Cereza, Moscatel, Torrontés Riojano, and Pedro Jimenez—grown at 850 meters in a high desert and trained on pergolas to shield the fruit from the sun. These grapes are the ancient heartbeat of South American wine, spontaneous crosses of Moscatel de Alejandría and Listán Prieto that defined winemaking on the continent for centuries.
